

Forty-five minutes.

The time the outgoing chief has been given to brief the relief.

Two years aboard. Forty-five minutes to transfer it.

Fault patterns. Supplier relationships. Workarounds never written down because there was no time to write them down.

The relief nods. Takes notes. Asks the questions he can think to ask.

He will discover the questions he should have asked over the next six months. Every time something breaks.

Forty-five minutes determines two years.

The handover should not depend on what one chief can remember to say in forty-five minutes of time.

The handover that wrote itself.
