

When the inspector asks.

A port state inspector steps aboard during a routine visit.
The captain has a few minutes to produce the records.

Every PMS holds records. Few hold defensible ones.

Unsigned service entries. Backdated work orders. Familiarisation logs added the morning of the inspection. The records exist. None of them survive scrutiny.

An invoice is not a record. A signed work order is.

A familiarisation log signed by the crew member is. A handover note that outlives the crew member's departure is. The record is the artifact that can be produced when the question is asked.

A denied warranty claim on a main engine runs between €20,000 and €100,000.

The maintenance is usually done. The proof is the issue.

Records that can be retroactively modified cannot serve as evidence.

The audit trail is not a feature. It is a legal defence.

Every read. Every write. Every signature.

Fault logged · Stbd generator high-temp

CE M████ · 2024-03-14 08:42 UTC

SIGNED

Work order created · WO-3291

System · 2024-03-14 08:42 UTC

SIGNED

Parts ordered · Heat exchanger PL-1104

CE M████ · 2024-03-14 09:15 UTC

SIGNED

The inspector asks. The records open.

Three years of vessel history in the same view.

Independently verifiable.

Drop a CelesteOS evidence export at verifier.celeste7.ai.

Verification runs entirely in your own browser. No upload. Open-source.

Control over your complexity.

celeste7.ai